No doubt about it—presidential nominations raise spirited debate. A century-plus tradition, Ohio Wesleyan’s Mock Convention brings its own political fervor every four years to OWU’s Gray Chapel.

CIVIC – AND CIVIL – ENGAGEMENT

Arneson Pledge needed more than ever

In February Ohio Wesleyan students, faculty, and staff gathered in Gray Chapel to continue a tradition that originated on this campus in 1884: Mock Convention. Consistent with past practice, Mock Convention replicates the national convention of the party not currently occupying the White House.

home state of Arkansas, where Melissa and I were joined by OWU Trustee and Delaware County Commissioner Jeff Benton and a group of students.

Delegates heard from Congressman Pat Tiberi, who encouraged them to engage with issues of interest and to probe deeply to ensure that they are not reasoned reflection. Students and faculty deliberated with one another and shared the convention floor as equals.

Ohio Wesleyan has a long history of educating citizens who are prepared to engage our civil society and advance the interests of our democracy. While Mock Convention dates from 1884, the

This year's convention was a gathering of the Republican Party. It was a showcase of the robust civic engagement that has long been treasured at Ohio Wesleyan—and a clear reminder of the desperate need in our society for deep but civil public debate and participation.

The delegates to Mock Convention engaged in spirited debate about the rules that would govern their work, the policies that would drive their campaign, and the candidates who would represent the Grand Old Party in the fall of 2016. They worked late into the night, and they were back early Saturday morning to complete their task. I had the pleasure of chairing the delegation from my misled by loud voices that too often are misinformed and/or simply unwilling to speak truthfully. Former Ohio Speaker Jo Ann Davidson, who will serve as co-chair of the Republican Party Convention in Cleveland this summer, spoke to the delegates about the many issues that surround preparation for a national party convention. Commissioner Benton gave a primer on the importance of local government in the lives of every citizen.

Notably absent from the proceedings were angry tirades, blistering personal attacks, stinging insults and polemics irrelevant to the purpose of the gathering. The convention turned loud at times, but all in the spirit of informed debate and commitment to preparation for public service often is associated most clearly with Ben Arneson, who served on the Ohio Wesleyan faculty for 36 years and in 1947 founded the Institute for Practical Politics and Public Affairs, which now bears his name. Arneson was fond of quoting Thomas Jefferson, who called on “better minds for better politics.”

Ben challenged his students to prepare for lives of public service by asking them to sign cards that became known as the Arneson Pledge. On the cards were written these words: "With a view to serving the public interest and regardless of the nature of my future vocation I pledge that, upon leaving college, I will devote a portion of my time to active and definite participation in public affairs."

Among the many students of Ben

Ben Arneson, founder of the Institute for Practical Politics and Public Affairs, challenged students to prepare for lives of public service.

Arneson who made an impact on our larger world was Arthur Fleming. Arthur Fleming graduated from Ohio Wesleyan in 1927 and returned to his alma mater to serve as president before later presidencies at the University of Oregon and Macalester College. His work in academic life was complemented by a lifetime of public service. He served as secretary of health, education and welfare in the Eisenhower administration and later as chairman of the Civil Rights Commission and chairman of the White House Conference on Aging. He was the second layman to be named president of the National Council of Churches. He received two Presidential Medals of Freedom. Arthur Fleming fulfilled the Arneson Pledge in extraordinary ways.

As I sat in Mock Convention I could not help thinking about the values reflected in Arneson and Fleming and echoed again in Gray Chapel this winter and their contrast with the noise that characterizes the political process in our country today. Now more than ever, our country hungers for individuals who are prepared to engage in a thoughtful and civil manner with the most pressing issues of our time. Now more than ever, our world needs leaders who have more interest in bridges of unity than walls of separation even as we confront the profound threats to liberty and human dignity that are so prominent. Now more than ever, our society needs individuals whose values are shaped and whose intellects are honed by the successors of Ben Arneson who teach on campuses like Ohio Wesleyan.

This may be the most important contribution of liberal arts education as we move toward the middle of the 21st century in a world that is increasingly divided and plagued with violence. We need thoughtful leaders who are prepared to engage in a civil society and to make the world a better place and who are committed to "active and definite participation in public affairs."

Those of us on campus today have the privilege of serving an institution with a heritage that is strong, a mission that is noble, and a future that is bright. That heritage is reflected in the likes of Ben Arneson and Arthur Fleming and is renewed among our faculty and students every day. As you read about Mock Convention and about other news from campus, I welcome your thoughts on our work together and on its impact on our larger society. ■

OWU earns top-5 finish in national moot court competition

When the final verdict was handed down, seniors Katherine Berger and Rhiannon Herbert earned an OWU-record-setting, top-5 finish in the American Collegiate Moot Court Association's national championship, held in January in Long Beach, CA.

Pre-law advisor Michael Esler, Ph.D., coach of OWU's moot court team, notes that Ohio Wesleyan was one of the two smallest schools in the country to advance a team as far as the tournament's round of 16.

Berger, who has been participating in Moot Court since her freshman year, called the annual competition "the defining experience of my college career."

"The adrenaline that you feel when you are standing in front of established legal professionals and being battered with questions, yet have the confidence that you know the answers and can hold your own, is incredible," says Berger, a resident of Sunbury, OH, who will pursue a future career as litigator at the trial or appellate level.

Herbert, who began competing as a junior, said the competition has significantly sharpened her public-speaking skills and her overall comfort in being in front of an audience.

"The most rewarding part of moot court is seeing all of the hard work you have poured into your outline and preparation pay off when you win a round against a team you didn't think you would beat," says Herbert, a resident of Mentor, OH, who hopes to become a state prosecuting attorney.

In addition to Berger and Herbert, Ohio Wesleyan junior Forest Dearing of Louisville, KY, and sophomore Chloe Dyer of Guysville, OH, also advanced from regional competition to the national finals.

"Neither had competed prior to this year, so to reach the finals was remarkable," Esler says.

The American Collegiate Moot Court Association is the premier moot court competition for undergraduates, Esler says, simulating an appellate court hearing in which teams of two "attorneys" argue constitutional issues before a panel of lawyers and judges who portray Supreme Court justices. This year's issues involved the free exercise of religion and equal protection rights of undocumented persons in the country illegally. ■

Ohio Wesleyan Education Department earns national honor

Ohio Wesleyan University's Department of Education is one of 35 at colleges and universities across the nation recently recognized for "effectiveness in preparing future teachers for knowledge in their anticipated subject areas."

The honor comes from the Washington, D.C.-based National Council on Teacher Quality (NCTQ), a nonpartisan research and policy group committed to "modernizing the teaching profession based on the belief that all children deserve effective teachers."

NCTQ examined 800 schools and chose to recognize 35 with an "A" grade for meeting its "high school content standard," which involved a review of Ohio Wesleyan's course content offerings, degree plans, and admissions selectivity.

Amy McClure, Ph.D., chair of the OWU Department of Education, says the university is committed to "preparing teachers who are ready to step into the classroom and teach effectively from day one. Our education majors spend more than 450 hours in local classrooms observing and assisting teachers and teaching lessons based on ideas they developed in methods courses." ■

Building a 'Learning Bridge'

Miranda Anthony '18, an English major and education minor, created a program to connect OWU's future teachers with Delaware children who lack stable housing to encourage the children's academic success.

"I wanted to enrich these children's lives holistically," Anthony says, "by creating a safe environment, both emotionally and physically, for them to do homework and, therefore, succeed in school."

Anthony created the Learning Bridge after-school program after becoming involved over the summer with Family

Promise of Delaware, a nonprofit organization that works to help homeless families achieve lasting independence.

"Ever since this summer, Delaware has begun to feel like home to me," says Anthony, who hails from nearby Mansfield, OH, "so I don't feel like I'm serving, I just feel like I'm growing further into the Delaware community." ■

Ohio Wesleyan faculty develop online summer courses

Whether they are working in Washington, researching in Rome, or interning in India, Ohio Wesleyan University students soon will have the opportunity to take online summer courses taught by OWU professors from anywhere in the world. Ohio Wesleyan faculty will offer up to six online courses in summer 2016 as part of a two-year pilot project supported by a gift from David P. Miller '54, of Chagrin Falls, OH.

Kyle Smith, associate professor of psychology, said the hardware and software obtained to support these classes also will be available for use in traditional classes, potentially benefiting "flipped classrooms" in which students watch lectures outside of class and use class time for discussions, problem sets, or other interactive activities.

"Most importantly, it lets OWU students take OWU courses from OWU professors," says Smith. "Each class is limited to 10 students, so the courses will maintain the close student-faculty interaction that is a hallmark of OWU. It will also open up the summer experience to more of our students."

Faculty selected to teach the courses in May and June will participate in spring workshops funded by the Miller gift to help them prepare for the pedagogical shift.

Miller, an economics major who graduated with honors and is president and CEO of Cleveland-based Columbia National Group Inc., says he's pleased to help students advance their Ohio Wesleyan educations even while they are away from campus.

"I am confident this initiative will enable students to keep learning during the summer while they work, complete off-campus internships, and continue to build successful futures," he says.

Thanks to Robert Bauman '53, the Bauman Family Foundation Endowment also provided support for the program, including enhancements that offer affordability and access for students.

President Rock Jones says the University is committed to ensuring that an Ohio Wesleyan education is accessible to the widest student population possible and that students are able to graduate on time, or even early, while still experiencing a top-notch liberal arts education.

"I commend our faculty and thank our generous donors for supporting such initiatives." ■

Ideas, insight, and imagination—in three minutes

In February, a standing-room-only crowd witnessed 10 professors deliver meaningful lectures with fascinating and important content in only three minutes.

The lively mini-lectures—called I³ (I-Cubed)—showcased great teaching and the breadth of expertise on the OWU campus. Lecture topics ranged from the flying rivers of Brazil and ancient conflicts in the Middle East, to medieval Yodas and cutting-edge music composition. The lectures demonstrated the power of combining the traditional liberal arts with practical experience, which is the hallmark of The OWU Connection.

“I really enjoyed the lectures,” says Julianne Zala '17. “They allowed me and the OWU community to learn about topics across disciplines and gauge what professors research and teach. I think the event is helpful for freshmen who are undecided because it might spark their interest in a particular program or department.”

Video of the event was broadcast live on the social media site Periscope, allowing several alumni to watch from across the country, and OWU students participating in field research at a nature preserve even tuned in.

Videos of each of the lectures are being used in marketing to prospective students and their families, giving them a taste of the great teaching they can find on our campus.

The videos of each lecture are available at owu.edu/academics/i-cubed-lectures. ■

SHAKE WITH THAT CHEESEBURGER?

The Hamburger Inn, established in 1932, is much more than a well-known burger joint—it's an Ohio Wesleyan student tradition that Ben Miller '16 calls “the heart and soul of OWU.” Just as the Local Farmers Coffee Club gathered to share a cup of brew in 1944 (above), groups of friends today still go there to share coffee—and milkshakes! From left (below): Michael Durfee '17, Miranda Ames '16, Natalie Geer '16, and Maha Shahid '18.

December 2013, in which the floors in the dining area and bathrooms were replaced and a new patio and two new bathrooms were built. Kitchen equipment was added and updated, the front windows were replaced, and new heating and cooling was installed. The front door and facade of the building were both restored to original condition. Despite all the spit and polish, however, these restorations don't take away from the diner's atmosphere, a proud tradition that has lasted 84 years.

GLOBAL LEARNING, FIRST-GEN EXPERIENCE SPARK GIVING

Ohio Wesleyan Board of Trustee member Nicholas “Nick” E. Calio ’75 recalls his first visit to the campus as a senior in high school when he was being recruited by Bishops football coach Jack Fouts ’48. “I fell in love with the campus and the people were so nice,” he says, but being the first in his family to attend college, financial aid was going to be deciding factor.

Eighteen-year-old Calio was crestfallen to learn OWU did not offer athletic scholarships, but Fouts sent Calio to speak with

Nicholas “Nick” ’75 and Lydia ’77 Calio

Fred Pollock ’50, then head of financial aid. Pollock told the young man from Cleveland that if he wanted to come to OWU, the school would find a way. Calio applied and was granted academic scholarships and on-campus jobs in a dining hall and as a security guard to help him through school.

“The man told me, ‘You can pay what you can afford, but when you’re here, we want you to feel like any other student,’” Calio recalls. “Ohio Wesleyan did everything it could for me, and I’ve never forgotten that.”

LIFELONG LEARNING THE HEART OF GIVING

Beeghly Library was a special place for Joellen Brown ’75 and her sister, Janet Brown ’79.

“The library had a spirit,” Joellen recalls. “It was the locus of the University, and even with the transition from card catalogs to computers, I suspect that’s the same today. I spent a lot of time there, and so did Janet.”

A Phi Beta Kappa student who earned the Slocum Prize recognizing the outstanding graduate in the humanities, Joellen went on to complete a master’s degree in English from the University of Pennsylvania and taught at several Philadelphia-area colleges.

Janet, who had set her sights on a career in library sciences ever since she was a little girl, earned a master’s in library science at Syracuse University. Joellen says her sister completed the program despite complications from multiple sclerosis, diagnosed when she was still at OWU. Janet passed away in 2003, before she could realize her dream.

To honor her sister, Joellen established the Janet L. Brown ’79 Endowment in Support of Libraries. The fund symbolizes Janet’s and Joellen’s lifelong interest in and commitment to education and the important role libraries play in a student’s life.

“Janet loved Ohio Wesleyan and her experiences there,” Joellen Brown says. “It was important to me to help extend her personal investment in libraries through this endowed fund, and ensure she makes a lasting contribution to the library sciences.”

Joellen says her sister, along with her brother, Stephen W. Brown ’72, who was a history major and who died in 2013, followed different paths but had meaningful OWU experiences. “We were all drawn to the intimacy of the educational experience at Ohio Wesleyan, the personal relationships between faculty and students, and the room we each had to become our own person,” she says.

In a successful career as a corporate speechwriter and now as executive director of communications for Verizon in Philadelphia, Joellen says giving back to higher education is an important part of her philanthropy.

Toward that end, she also has made a generous provision in her estate plan to establish The Joellen Brown ’75 Endowed Scholarship Fund to provide student scholarships.

“I have admired the work the University has done to distinguish itself and to reinvent that liberal arts experience,” she says. “But the future of liberal arts universities is by no means guaranteed. I’m happy to do something that will offer this special experience to a new generation of students and help strengthen Ohio Wesleyan in the changing environment.” ■

“Ohio Wesleyan did everything it could for me, and I’ve never forgotten that.”

—Nick Calio '75

Today Calio and his wife, Lydia '77, serve on the Campaign Leadership Committee of Ohio Wesleyan’s Connect Today, Create Tomorrow Campaign and have committed a $600,000 gift to fulfill that same dream for other students. The Calios’ commitment is the first donation recorded in response to Ohio Wesleyan’s major gift-match program, and benefits the annual fund, supports the President’s Circle, and creates a new endowed student scholarship.

When describing their commitment to fellow trustees at a board meeting, Nick gave an emotional testimony, saying, “This gift is one of the most satisfying things I’ve ever done in my life. It really feels good.”

Nick emphasizes that the theory-to-practice grants and The OWU Connection offer students, especially those “who were like me, a major opportunity for a solid grounding with their education and the ability to apply it to their lives so they can go on to be leaders and do good things.”

During their years at Ohio Wesleyan, Nick, an English major, and Lydia, an English and Fine Arts major, studied abroad for one semester in England. “It was one of the most meaningful experiences I had, and I realized just how much it can change a student’s life,” Lydia says.

Nick went on to receive a law degree at Case Western Reserve University, and was in private practice before he worked at the White House, once as assistant to the president for legislative affairs for President George H.W. Bush, and later as President George W. Bush’s principal liaison to Congress. He is now president and CEO of Airlines for America, an industry trade group.

“We really believe in where the school is heading, especially under Rock’s leadership,” Lydia says, citing the college’s global experience and “solid liberal arts education.”

“That’s why we gave the scholarship,” says Nick. “We believe in what the campaign leadership is doing, what the school is doing, and we want to be a part of it.”

“We’ve always been active in our giving because Ohio Wesleyan gave us a lot.” ■

PARENTS FIND OWU WELCOMING

Laura Heaney '18 and her father Steve first visited Ohio Wesleyan on an orientation trip, flying in from their home in Los Angeles in 2013. The trip was the start of Lauren’s journey.

“There were a lot of things that immediately drew Lauren to Ohio Wesleyan,” Steve says, “the global learning opportunities such as The OWU Connection, the beautiful campus, friendly students, and the genuine welcome people gave her.”

Lauren’s final decision wasn’t hard. “They really made me feel at home,” she told her parents, Steve and Hope.

Along the way, Steve and Hope were transformed, too. The OWU welcome sparked the Heaneys’ interest in becoming active with the University through the Parents Leadership Council, a community of OWU ambassador parents who participate in educational, social, and fundraising outreach programs to engage other new and prospective OWU parents.

Council members visit campus twice a year to meet with students, faculty, other parents, and administrators. They also participate in gift giving through the Parents Fund.

Steve and Hope Heaney

“It’s wonderful that they engage parents and exchange ideas. It’s clear our opinion matters—they’re listening.”

—Hope Heaney

“We recognize that tuition and fees don’t cover all the great liberal arts programs, and it’s our way of helping the school offer opportunities to all students,” Steve says of the Parents Fund. He and Hope feel their contributions can help create an affordable OWU to make a difference in meeting the full financial needs of admitted students, holding down student debt, and recruiting talented, high-need applicants.

Hope appreciates OWU’s outreach to parents through the Parents Leadership Council, including hearing from OWU administrators about issues facing the school. “OWU feels so accessible,” she says. “It’s wonderful that they engage parents and exchange ideas. It’s clear our opinion matters—they’re listening.”

Lauren, an English and creative writing major who is the youngest of the Heaney’s three children, plans to spend spring semester abroad in Ireland in Spring 2017.

Hope and Steve encourage other parents to participate in the council and to support the Parents Fund. “It’s a great way to connect with your child’s education,” says Steve. ■

Mike Plantholt

● Selby Stadium

Men's Lacrosse Head Coach Mike Plantholt has quickly made his mark at Ohio Wesleyan. In his first season (2011), the Battling Bishops won a share of the NCAC championship and a berth in the NCAA Division III playoffs. By 2015, his team was setting school records, winning their first 18 games, advancing to the quarterfinals of the NCAA tournament, and achieving a .947 winning percentage, the best in OWU history.

He says, "I've focused my whole life the past five or six years to make this one of the top lacrosse programs in the country."

He's succeeding. In Coach Plantholt's first five seasons, his teams are 64-20 and have twice won the NCAC tournament. They regularly compete in the NCAA playoffs. And he has twice been named NCAC Coach of the Year.

Mike's comfort zone is on the sideline in historic Selby Stadium. It's no wonder. In four out of Mike's first five seasons, the Bishops have lost no more than one home game. Last year they were a perfect 9-0 in Selby.

With a degree in psychology from Gettysburg and an MBA from Mount St. Mary's University, Mike stresses the importance of academic success for his players.

"My goal as a coach is to help our student-athletes grow so that over the course of four years they become better students, better lacrosse players, and better people. I want them to succeed everywhere."

1 LAX Standout

Mike grew up playing in Baltimore, Maryland, where he says lacrosse is the unofficial state sport. He learned the game from his father, and when he reached Gettysburg College, he had an outstanding career. He was a 2-time All-American and 3-time all-conference selection. In his senior season, 2001, he was named Division III Defenseman of the Year after leading the Bullets to their first-ever appearance in the NCAA Division III national championship game.

2 A Passion for Liberal Arts

Mike attended a liberal arts college because, "I didn't want to get lost in a big school. I wanted to go to a college where I'd get the full student experience and the full athletic experience. And I wanted to go to a place where the alums cared about the students." He says those same characteristics hold true for OWU.

3 East Coast Roots—Replanted

"Being an East Coast guy my whole life, I thought I'd never want to make a move to the Midwest. But when I came here, I fell in love with the place. My wife (Dawn) and I both really love the community here and the sense of family the department and alums provide."

4 Historic and Raucous Selby

Mike says the great history and tradition—and the large seating capacity—make Selby one of the most unique D-III stadiums. "On game day, when our stands are packed, you can feel the energy. The atmosphere our students create in this stadium makes it a great venue. Our guys love playing here."

5 Team Psychology

Mike says he grew up wanting to be a psychiatrist, and he majored in psychology at Gettysburg. "Psychology made sense to me," he says. Now, he puts his training in team psychology to use keeping his players focused. He says early in his coaching career, he'd always try to prepare a great pregame speech, "something that would get the guys really fired up." Now, he does that in practices, but not on game day. "I don't want them to get too emotional. I want them to keep their eyes on the prize and stay focused."

6 Family Man

Coffee is an essential for the father of a newborn boy (Michael Jr., born in February) and a 3-year-old daughter (Mary).

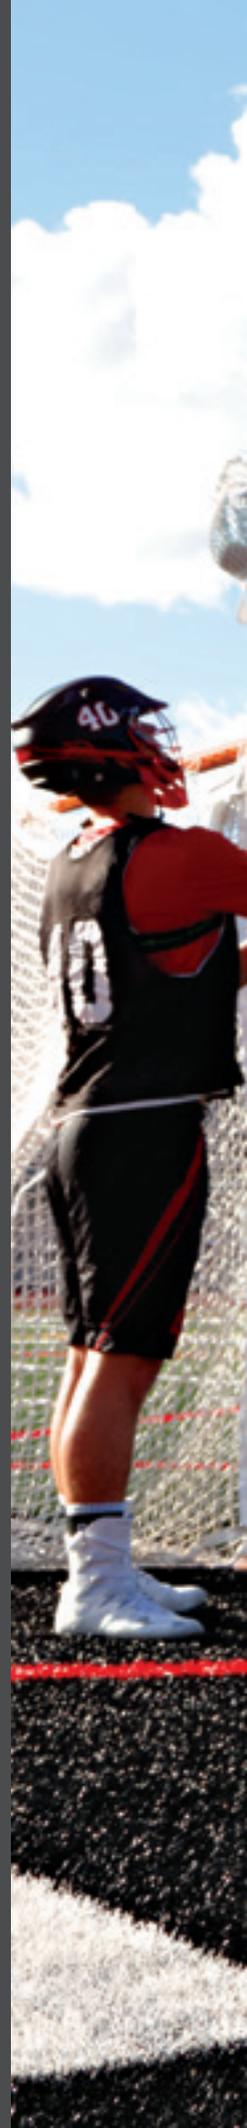

7 All Points of the Compass

Mike and his assistant coaches log long miles in recruiting season. They focus heavily on the East Coast but span out across the continent. The current roster includes players from 18 states and provinces, from Cape Cod to California, Ontario to North Carolina.

8 The Alumni Have Our Backs

Mike says the support of alumni has been crucial in helping to provide assistant coaches who can help in recruiting. "The OWU lacrosse alums have been very good to the program. We wouldn't be where we are without their support."

BREAKING

BOUNDARIES

Biology Professor Laurie Anderson is on a quest to solve 21st-century problems, and her students are part of the solution.

By Abby Hanson '16

“When I first got the actual letter,” Professor Laurel “Laurie” Anderson says about receiving her award notification, “I thought, ‘Why did they bother to send the rejection letter Federal Express?’”

Anderson, a professor of botany-microbiology at Ohio Wesleyan since 2001, may not have imagined that she would be selected the 2015 Ohio Professor of the Year, a prestigious award sponsored by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching and the Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE). But her students and colleagues weren’t surprised. Anderson’s talent for presenting class content clearly to science majors and nonmajors alike, her belief in treating students as research partners, and her dedication to research inside and outside the classroom created a dynamic learning environment.

A SCIENTIST IN THE CLASSROOM

Nathan Madonich '16 says Anderson is the reason he became a botany major as a freshman. She opened his eyes to how “plants are helpful on an ecological level and how humans are able to use their various attributes.” Since taking the Organisms in their Environment class with Anderson, Madonich has developed a keen interest for a subject he hadn’t considered before coming to OWU.

Developing student interest in the field, goes beyond simply lecturing, Anderson believes. It requires creating an environment in which students are scientists in the classroom. She explained her approach in her award essay as one in which she “didn’t see students, instead, I saw research partners.” Anderson embeds research into her classes so students learn to practice ecology instead of just hearing about it.

President Rock Jones says Anderson “sets the ultimate example of structuring a research agenda that advances her own work while also creating extraordinary opportunities for undergraduate students to share in that research and to develop their own scholarly habits.”

Several students can attest that Anderson helped them grow significantly as scientists through their collaborative research. Blake Fajack '16 worked with Anderson in an independent study project to make a documentary from footage he took in the Galápagos. He says the most striking thing about working with Anderson is that he “very much felt that [he] was working with her and not as her student.” Their work was symbiotic; he knew the necessary film-related parts to include, and Anderson “knew the necessary research components.”

Adrian Pekarcik '14 succeeded with Anderson’s help as well. After a presentation he gave in her Plant Communities and Ecosystems class, Anderson suggested Pekarcik pursue a research project based on the presentation. With Anderson’s help, Pekarcik was able to earn an OWU Student Individualized Project grant and help introductory botany students restore two plantings on OWU’s campus.

He identified the local arthropod communities from three habitats on campus, successfully defended his research as an honor’s thesis project, and was awarded the Burns-Shirling Award for Outstanding Achievement in Botany & Microbiology.

Pekarcik says his time with Anderson also prepared him for his job with the National Park Service and for graduate school at Auburn University.

Lauren Blyth '06 completed a two-semester independent study with Anderson that turned into a published research paper. Blyth says Anderson is “realistic and down-to-earth—and not just in the soil labs.” She says Anderson taught her the importance of setting goals, but also of not being too hard on herself. Blyth says she considered Anderson an “equal collaborator” in their study of deer-dispersed seeds.

Anderson stresses the importance of not only treating students as research partners to enhance their learning experience, but also of showing them that faculty are people who are also always learning. One of her mottos is, “How can I learn more about the world and communicate that to other people?”

COLLABORATIVE RESEARCH

With funding from the National Science Foundation, Anderson, along with other faculty from undergraduate colleges across the nation, founded the Ecological Research as Education Network (EREN). The network’s mission is to create and test models for collaborative, publishable ecological research involving faculty and undergraduate students coordinating data collection in different sites from across the United States and the world.

“Ecologists at small colleges usually collect data with their students, but rarely do they collaborate at this large scale,” says Anderson, who is the EREN coordinator.

EREN has grown from its start in 2010 to include more than 300 faculty members from over 200 colleges nationwide. According to a 2015 survey of EREN faculty, over 4,000 students have been involved in EREN projects in some way.

Anderson explains that many ecologists do fieldwork with students, but collecting a little bit of data at a single site often is not useful scientifically. However, through the vast network created by EREN, collecting “a little bit of data” at a lot of different sites can lead to new discoveries in ecology.

Anderson says EREN is not only a great scientific research tool but also helps students think on broader scales. For instance, instead of focusing on how a forest ecosystem works at only one site, students can compare data from different forest sites and see that forests can vary in their responses to stresses such as pathogens and human disturbance based on the climate, soil type, and surrounding landscape the forest occurs in.

EREN also allows students to learn to categorize and share data effectively. For example, Anderson says, what if one person places a species name in a column labeled “Species,” but someone else calls it “Name of Plant”? “When you try to merge those in a computer program or database, it doesn’t work,” she says. “Because of this difficulty, professors in EREN try to teach students essential techniques for sharing data among multiple sites and scientists.”

“WICKED” PROBLEM SOLVERS

Anderson believes a liberal arts education is the key to solving “wicked problems,” a term first coined in 1972 by social science theorists Horst Rittel and Melvin Webber. She defines these problems as “so complicated and multi-faceted that they appear almost unsolvable,” such as poverty or global climate change. To solve these problems, she says, the next generation needs a “diverse intellectual toolset.”

Ohio Wesleyan, Anderson says, is the perfect place to foster this type of toolset. Students here learn “cultural sensitivity, quantitative skills, critical thinking, and communication skills” — all essential to solving these 21st-century problems.

A graduate of Colby College in Maine, Anderson has been dedicated to liberal arts from the start. She recalls an early experience: “I was in a Mexican restaurant, and a student came up and said, ‘Dr. Anderson I just wanted to tell you that I used to never pay attention to environmental articles that I read in the newspaper, but now after your class, I do. I look at them all the time and I think about those things a lot.’ I said, ‘Well that’s great. What’s your major?’ And she said, ‘Finance.’ I was so pleased to think that somebody going into finance would have some perspective on environmental issues.”

The incident inspired Anderson to teach at a college like Ohio Wesleyan.

“I find it really satisfying to teach at a liberal arts college and educate not only the next scientist, but also the next business person, artist, or writer about ecology.”

After 15 years, then, how does Anderson develop diverse toolsets for solving these wicked problems? She believes interdisciplinary studies are a great starting point. This year Anderson and Karen Poremski, associate professor of English, were selected to participate in a multi-institution grant from the Great Lakes College Association focused on creating interdisciplinary courses.

Anderson and Poremski plan to develop a course linking ecological science and literature at a grant-funded workshop this summer. The fundamental idea, Anderson says, is to have students read both scientific papers and literature on the same topics taken from nature, and compare and contrast different ways of knowing and exploring the natural world. The course will be submitted for review by Ohio Wesleyan’s Academic Policy Committee in Fall 2016, with plans to offer it to students in Spring 2017.

Professor Anderson explores green spaces inside and outside the classroom with her students.

—Laurie Anderson

Anderson also develops problem toolsets through her travel-learning courses. Even though it is a single class and subject, Anderson's plant ecology course in Brazil is multidisciplinary in its own way. While studying the ecology of Brazil, students also learn about other aspects of the country from local guides, such as how poverty affects the environment. Understanding tropical forest ecology requires some perspective on human interactions with the ecosystem, says Anderson.

Her students have fond memories of these travel-learning courses, considering

Anderson not just as a professor, but also a fun and interesting peer. Madonich says he was surprised to find out that along with ecology, Anderson is interested in music and is an "art aficionado." But, most notably, he says, "she plays ukulele and does a great rendition of Stairway to Heaven."

After considering all of Anderson's incredible teaching and research accomplishments, Marissa Witkovsky '15 says she knows what makes her mentor most deserving of the Ohio Professor of the Year award. "Sometimes professors put pressure on 'exceptional' students to succeed on a certain set path," Witkovsky says, "but Laurie has always simply listened to my struggles and questions and has given me honest advice about everything—careers, life, etc. Of course she would love to see students do big, amazing things, but it means a lot to me that she says nothing I do will ever disappoint her." ■

U.S. Professor of the Year Award

Dr. Laurie Anderson is the second OWU professor to earn the prestigious Ohio Professor of the Year honor. Zoology Professor Edward H. “Jed” Burt Jr., now retired, was named the 2011 Ohio Professor of the Year.

The U.S. Professor of the Year Awards Program is the only national one of its type that celebrates the accomplishments of undergraduate teachers and mentors. Sponsored by the Council for Advancement and Support of Education, which started the program in 1981, and the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, the program recognizes excellence in teaching and teachers’ positive influence on the lives and careers of students

Using stringent criteria, the program each year awards winners at the national and state level. Applications are judged by three panels based on impact on and involvement with undergraduate students, scholarly approach to teaching and learning, contributions to undergraduate education in the institution, community, and profession, and support from colleagues and former undergraduate students.

OHIO WESLEYAN'S MOCK CONVENTION HAS BROUGHT REAL POLITICS AND DEBATE TO CAMPUS FOR MORE THAN A CENTURY.

During a cold two days in February, Gray Chapel was a place of fiery political oratory and pageantry. With colorful signs and speeches dominating the proceedings, some 400 student delegates and other participants at Ohio Wesleyan University's Mock Convention gathered to choose the Republican nominee for U.S. president. The choices came down to Sen. Ted Cruz of Texas and Ohio Gov. John Kasich. Neither candidate had enough delegates to handily win the nomination, which meant a second vote was needed. ★ The winning candidate needed at least 139 delegates to be the nominee. In the final run-off, and to the applause of many in the crowd, Kasich pulled ahead with 173 delegates, overtaking Cruz's 100 delegate count. South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley was nominated for vice president.

Congressman Pat Tiberi addresses OWU's 2016 Mock Convention from the stage of Gray Chapel.

★ A SPIRITED TRADITION ★

One of the oldest and most beloved of OWU traditions, Mock Convention is held during presidential election years, and is limited to the current out-of-power political party. Since 1884, and except for some nominating cycles when the event wasn't held, Ohio Wesleyan students have run the mock conventions—bargaining and boasting, debating and dealing, pounding the podium and championing their candidates.

President Rock Jones, who participated along with students, faculty, and staff, says Mock Convention is “the ultimate example of opportunities for students to connect theory to practice as they experience firsthand the dynamics of a national political party convention, including adopting rules for the convention, debating and adopting a platform, and nominating candidates for president and vice president.

“This year’s convention included spirited and thoughtful debate on many of the most pressing domestic and international issues facing this year’s candidates,” he says. “I was impressed by the participation of our students, and they had great fun along the way.”

Mock Convention Faculty Advisor Ashley Biser says Mock Convention is a unique and practical learning experience for students across the academic spectrum, helping students not only learn about the political process, but also learn about making an argument to appeal to people with whom they might disagree.

“I was particularly impressed by the students from Amy Downing’s conservation biology class, who made some great arguments for environmental protection designed to appeal to Republicans,” she says.

Convention organizers also gain valuable experience, Biser adds. “The process provides an opportunity [for students] to learn how to organize a big event, as well as to educate and mobilize their peers. The biggest organizational challenge is figuring out how to appeal to students who don’t even know what conventions are.”

Biser says organizers had a few fun mishaps, such as initially ordering blue pens for a Republican convention.

Jon Peterson '76, Treasurer of Delaware County, makes a call to order before nominations begin.

“On the whole the students organizing the convention did a tremendous job. I was particularly excited to have so many faculty from different disciplines participate.”

★ PROCEDURES AND PLATFORM ★

OWU’s convention runs along the lines of a brokered convention, with no candidate having the majority before the nominating convention. Typically, the national conventions have set nominees, with the number of delegates already allocated during primaries.

The Mock Convention also addresses the party’s platform. Members of the executive committee draft the platform, and delegates are encouraged to make changes. Delegates must learn to follow political procedure and work through red tape, completing a system of amendment forms and obtaining a number of signatures. Any delegate who proposes changes to the platform advocates for the revisions, and the moderator opens the floor to oppose or support the proposal. The delegations then vote “up or down.”

“It was a really great way to learn more about the political process,” says Lee LeBoeuf ’17 a psychology major. William Louthan, OWU professor of politics and government, has participated in every convention since 1976.

He joined the faculty in June 1972, soon after that year’s convention.

“I heard a lot about it because it was a big, gigantic thing that people were interested in—just so many students and faculty were participating...But I had to wait four years to experience it.”

Louthan, the parliamentarian since his first convention, displayed his political expertise and years of experience at the 2016 convention when the Texas delegation motioned to secede from the Union. Louthan said he would allow it only if Texas understood that its delegates would lose all voting rights if the state succeeded. A laugh erupted in Gray Chapel as the Texas state chair rescinded the motion.

Louthan believes students made the most impressive selection in the 1984 convention, when they nominated a Mondale/Ferraro ticket.

“We nominated Walter Mondale. Now that might not have been surprising because he had been vice president previously. But for our convention here, in the spring of 1984 to nominate [Geraldine] Ferraro, the first and only woman to run on a major party ticket for president or vice president...and for it to actually happen in the real world, that’s pretty impressive.”

Craig Ramsay, a former professor of politics and government and former chair of the department, agrees with Louthan’s assessment of the Mondale/Ferraro ticket.

“We got that one exactly right. Every time I think of both positions that have been correctly predicted by our Mock Convention, that’s what I think of.”

Ramsay’s most memorable delegation, however, was 20 years ago when the Kentucky delegation, headed by Marty Kalb, now a professor emeritus of fine arts, arrived at the proceedings outfitted in Jack Daniel’s hats, vests, and signs obtained from the whisky retailer’s corporate headquarters. OWU’s Mock Convention always aligns with the political party not occupying the White House, making this year a Republican Party event.

Both Louthan and Ramsey say there is little difference in the number of students participating whether it is a Democratic or Republican convention.

“We have always been able to get the students, no matter what their personal partisan and ideological preferences may be, to find a role they can play in that convention,” Louthan says.

Ramsay notes Ohio Wesleyan used to have a moderate Republican student body, but thinks it’s changed to more Democrat-leaning. OWU students, he says, are “good at playing the role of the party that happens to be out of the White House.”

MOCK CONVENTION

Who is James G. Blaine?

Today, that could be a winning “answer” on Jeopardy.

But 132 years ago, James Blaine was big news. He was the Republican presidential candidate in 1884, narrowly losing the election to Grover Cleveland. It marked the first time since 1860 that a Republican did not win the White House.

More significantly to Ohio Wesleyan, James Blaine was the first presidential candidate nominated at OWU’s Mock Convention. His selection marked the first of nine times (so far) that the OWU students’ selection matched the nominee chosen at the national convention. For vice president, OWU nominated Robert Todd Lincoln, the eldest son of Abraham Lincoln and the secretary of war at the time.

Mock Convention brings together Ohio Wesleyan students, faculty, and staff, as well as members of the Delaware community for a two-day educational and social experience. Participants learn about the upcoming election’s candidates, important national issues, and more about the political process. Previous political experience is not required.

From the first Mock Convention through 1968, all but the 1932 convention aligned with the Republican Party. Beginning in 1972, OWU decided to hold conventions for the party not currently in office. The 1980, 1996, 2012, and 2016 conventions

★ SPURRING AN INTEREST IN POLITICS ★

Jai Chabria '99, who studied politics and government and English at OWU, participated in the 1996 convention as a freshman in the Michigan delegation, and returned by request to the 2000 convention.

Now a senior advisor to Governor Kasich, Chabria wasn't sure about going into politics when he first participated in the convention. He says the convention helped spur his interest in politics, and provided a good entry into what life in politics is like.

"It wasn't the sole driving force," he says, "but it was a really fun way to portray something that is a part of Americana and that you take part in it."

Chabria has attended three national Republican conventions since he entered the world of politics. He notes that even though the Mock Convention is quite different from national conventions, the event is a good introduction into real-life politics. He considers OWU's Mock Convention to be a "nod to what conventions at one point were like," but adds, "Who knows, maybe [the 2016 GOP] convention will be more like it [a brokered convention]." ■ were Republican, and the conventions in 1972, 1976, 1984, 1988, 1992, 2004, and 2008 were Democratic.

AND REAL HISTORY

The complete history of Mock Convention is detailed in a paper, "Mock Presidential Nominating Conventions at Ohio Wesleyan, 1884-2008," by Professor Emeritus Earl Warner and updated by Craig Ramsay, professor emeritus of politics and government.

Warner notes that the most contentious Mock Convention may have occurred in 1924, when OWU failed to nominate a candidate. He writes that the "convention was carefully planned under the auspices of the Republican, Social Science and Liberal clubs." However, 60 delegates favoring Sen. Robert

LaFollette, R-WI, left the convention, making it impossible for any candidate to win the requisite number of votes. The 60 delegates banded together to form the 'Liberal Party of America,' and nominated LaFollette. (At the Republican National Convention held later that year in Cleveland, the nomination went to Calvin Coolidge, with 1,065 delegates to LaFollette's 34 delegates.)

Only once did OWU students correctly predict both the presidential and vice presidential candidates. This happened in 1984, when OWU nominated former Vice President Walter Mondale and Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro.

1988 - Student delegates are fired up for Rev. Jesse Jackson and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis.

1984 - U.S. Sen. Gary Hart (D-CO) won the nomination in the mock Democratic convention.

1980 - Student delegates chose George H. W. Bush for president and Howard Baker for vice-president at the mock Republican convention.

Art & Artifice

On a balmy mid-February weekend this year, laughter permeated the Studio Theatre of Chappellear Drama Center. The comedic play “Artifice” had the audience smiling throughout its four-performance sold-out run.

The story centers on East Coast elite wannabes who attend a private art reception at the home of an art dealer’s upstate New York home. When the eccentric characters are snowed in, the guests—egotistical artists, conniving dealers, and vengeful wealthy patrons—become entangled in a tale of mistaken identities, secret schemes, jealous lovers, and financial ruin.

The scenario had all the makings of ploy and pretense, but for its director and writer, the performance had a very real and special behind-the-scenes significance: The play marked the reunion of its director and Ohio Wesleyan theatre professor Bonnie Milne Gardner ’77 and her former student and theatre major Anne Flanagan ’87, who wrote the award-winning play. The occasion also celebrated the OWU theatre alumni and faculty connection.

CREATING ART AND CONNECTIONS

For Gardner, the George and Louise Peters Professor of Theatre & Dance, and Flanagan, both award-winning playwrights, the opportunity to work together again after so many years was a fitting tribute. Gardner retires this year from the Department of Theatre and Dance after 31 years teaching playwriting, American drama, and theatre education. “Artifice” marks her final production as an OWU faculty member. The play opened on February 18, and Flanagan was brought back to campus as a guest artist.

“Having Anne here for the packed houses meant so much to the cast and crew,” Gardner says. “They loved hearing her stories of the journey from acting on the OWU stage to getting her work performed on multiple continents.

“I’m so grateful that the department’s Hunter-Eyssen-Crosby Guest Fund for guest artists enabled us to make that happen. It is an endowment created by theatre alums to honor three wonderful professors who built our program in the mid 1900s.”

Flanagan says, “Not only did I have the pleasure of watching my play performed incredibly well, but I was able to meet with the delightful theatre students and hold a Q&A about my show biz experiences, which I hope was more informative than depressing,” she laughs.

“It was wonderful to reconnect with Bonnie and the uber-talented Glen Vanderbilt (OWU professor of theatre), plus the performances were completely sold out. We were a hot ticket!”

The students participating in the production were equally thrilled. Sarah Shulman, who played one of the leading roles, calls it “an incredible experience.”

“The rehearsal process was both fun and educational,” she says. “Professor Gardner emphasized parts of the rehearsal that brought both an inward character focus as well as an outward reaction toward the rest of the cast. I couldn’t be more grateful for the opportunity to act under Prof Gardner’s direction, and even more so for the opportunity to be a part of her last show!”

AWARD-WINNING WORK

Gardner has had more than 20 scripts produced by professional, community, and educational theatres in Alaska, California, Florida, New York, Ohio, and Virginia. A member of the Dramatists Guild, she has worked professionally as a director and arts administrator. She also has been an active dramaturg, an arts advocate who creates links between artists and institutions, and institutions and their communities.

Among Gardner’s many accolades are two awards for Excellence in Playwriting from the Ohio Arts Council, and in 2011 she was awarded the Welch Meritorious Teaching Award. She was named a finalist at the Edward Albee Playwriting Conference and at San Diego’s Human Rights Theatre Festival. In 2001 she published The Playwright-Director in American Theatre.

The first connection between Gardner and Flanagan came in 1985, during Gardner’s first year as a professor at OWU, and in her first production, “The Art of Dining,” a culinary comedy by Tina Howe. The play starred then-OWU junior Flanagan, who played the role of Ellen, a chef whose husband eats almost all the food before she can serve it at their gourmet restaurant.

In order to prepare Flanagan and her “husband” Cal, played by Eric Winzenried '88, for the part of gourmet restaurant owners, Gardner arranged for chef Kent Rigsby '75, then a chef at Lindey’s Restaurant & Bar in German Village, to instruct the young actors on culinary cues such as how to prepare a meal, pour wine, and hold a knife. A famed chef, Rigsby went on to operate the iconic Columbus restaurant Rigsby’s Kitchen for 29 years.

Flanagan, who also majored in journalism and minored in psychology, recalls the fun she had with her “Dining” character. “I love comedy that comes out of character,” she says. “As an audience member, I find it really enjoyable, and as an actor, it’s incredibly fun to play.”

“The Art of Dining” remains one of her favorite plays, she adds, because of the food and the social issues and gender politics in it. Still, she says, “For as much as I think plays can and should challenge people, there is also room for a play that simply makes people laugh.”

COAST-TO-COAST CAREER

For Flanagan, who lives in Los Angeles, coming back to Delaware to see Gardner direct her play was an exciting opportunity to celebrate and reconnect with her mentor.

“Bonnie brought a refreshing, positive energy to the department,” she says. “She focused on female playwrights, and she helped me find my voice. Plus, I was thrilled to have a female professor.”

Flanagan remembers Gardner’s guidance as she prepared her one-woman senior project production. “That project was a big leap for me,” she says. “Bonnie really helped me see it through.”

Flanagan moved to New York City after graduation to pursue acting, primarily improvisational comedy. In 1992 she moved to Los Angeles, where she found film and television work. She landed small parts in several major films in 1994, including the thrillers The Last Seduction, starring Linda Fiorentino and Bill Pullman; Disclosure, featuring Michael Douglas and Demi Moore; and White Mile, with Alan Alda and Peter Gallagher.

After a few years the Delaware native says she “got stuck” at a certain level as an actress. “I kept getting boring ‘girlfriend parts’ and there was a lot of just sitting around,” she says, so she started writing plays.

She wrote monologues for herself and friends to perform, short plays, and eventually full-length scripts. Her work went on to win a number of awards, including the Bloomington Playwrights Project/Reva Shiner Comedy Award (for “Artifice”), the Julie Harris/Janet and Maxwell Salter Playwrights Award, the McLaren Memorial Comedy Award, the Mountain Playhouse Comedy Award, and the Playwright’s Theater “Plays for the 21st Century” Award, among others.

Her latest play, “Lineage,” is a finalist for the Strange Sun Theatre’s Greenhouse Project and was a finalist for the Henley-Rose Award in 2015.

Gardner says Flanagan sent her an early draft of “Artifice” a number of years ago. Flanagan revised the draft several times from 2006 to 2010, before it premiered at the Bloomington Playwright’s Theatre. The theatre sent the play to a publisher, which published it in 2012. “Artifice” has since been performed throughout the United States, Canada, and as distant as New Zealand. Inspired by her love of Agatha Christie, Flanagan says she always saw “Artifice” as “an ensemble piece where everyone is a strong character.”

Gardner came across “Artifice” in 2014 when she was looking for her last play to direct as a faculty member—one “with good roles for women.”

“I got a copy of the published form and loved it.”

ALL IN THE “ART” FAMILY

“Artifice” also has reunited former “The Art of Dining” castmates and theatre faculty, including theatre professor D. Glen Vanderbilt Jr., who created the set design in the 1985 production and assisted with the props and set dressing for the 2016 show.

Brad Sadler ’04, who teaches part-time in OWU’s theatre department, played the role of Mick and choreographed the fight scenes; Zoe Crankshaw ’15, who is technical director for theatre at the Columbus School for Girls, designed the lights; and Emeritus Fine Arts faculty Marty Kalb provided original abstract art works to be used on the set. Gardner says she took Kalb’s two-dimensional design course in her first semester as a student in fall 1973.

As if the OWU “theatre family” link couldn’t go any further, Gardner in 1987 directed the play “Volleys,” written by OWU Emeritus Professor of English Robert Flanagan, Anne’s father, in the same black box theatre where she’s directing his daughter’s play.

In between playwriting jobs, Flanagan teaches theatre part time for the Los Angeles Unified School District, and she is CEO of Health Education Advocates, LLC, a company that teaches medical students patient care techniques. For over 10 years, she worked as a freelance private investigator, a job where she learned “a lot about public records, not-so-public records, and sneaking around LA’s back alleys.”

As for Gardner’s future, she plans to spend more time writing. She adds that leaving Ohio Wesleyan and moving out of state with her husband, Bruce, will be bittersweet, since three generations of her family have attended OWU, where she’s made lifelong friends.

“I’ll definitely miss the fabulous students,” she says. “They have taught me more than I can say, and served as inspiring collaborators over the years. There’s only one thing I love more—writing—and I look forward to days filled with nothing but!

“Bruce and I plan to simply run away from home.” ■

2015 Grad Takes One-Man Show to New York Stage

Disability and sex.

These themes may not appear to be related to most people, but for Ryan Haddad ’15, a gay man with cerebral palsy, they are as real as the braces on his legs.

The Parma, Ohio, native, who majored in theatre and creative writing at Ohio Wesleyan, now lives in New York City as an actor and writer, working as a licensing representative for Samuel French, Inc., a major publisher of musicals and plays. His senior capstone one-man production, “Hi, Are You Single?” which he continues to perform, explores his own take on the complicated intersection of romance and disability as a single gay man.

His solo performance earned him Ohio Wesleyan’s 2015 Excellence in Performance Award, and he has since gone on to perform the show at New York’s Dixon Place and to sold-out performances at the Hot! Festival, a prominent LGBT theatre festival.

The Huffington Post has called the performance “a stirring work of theater, replete with both heartrending and deliberately hilarious moments.”

“I feel so strongly that the media, and people in general, have completely desexualized disability,” says Haddad, who recently had a small guest role on the Netflix series “Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt.” He aims to challenge that preconception, as well as the lack of representation in the media and the arts, of people with disabilities living full lives. Haddad says he never had to confront his cerebral palsy until he started trying to date. “Ninety-five percent of men don’t look at me because of the braces and walker.”

At OWU, Professor of Theatre Edward Kahn cast Haddad in “Ring Round the Moon” when Haddad was a freshman. One of his favorite roles was in “A Little Night Music,” where he played the role of the grandmother. He wrote short plays, including “Art Unfinished,” which became an American College Theater Festival regional finalist.

Haddad credits a weeklong OWU master workshop with acclaimed Los Angeles-based performance artist Tim Miller as the springboard for his work. Miller’s mentorship led Haddad to develop a full-length piece about his own experience. “That was the really defining part of my time at OWU,” he says. “I was on this new path to find my own voice as a writer and performer.”

BASKETBALL, TRACK & FIELD CAPTURE LEAGUE TITLES

By Mark Beckenbach '81

Three North Coast Athletic Conference championships, two career coaching milestones, and a trio of All-America selections highlighted the winter sports season at Ohio Wesleyan.

The men's basketball team shared the NCAC championship with a 15-3 record, repeating as conference champion for the first time since the 1987-88 team won the last of four consecutive NCAC titles.

Ohio Wesleyan received an at-large bid to the NCAA Division III tournament, the Bishops' fifth consecutive NCAA tournament appearance, and hosted the first and second rounds at Branch Rickey Arena.

The Bishops defeated Pitt-Greensburg, 114-68, in the first round. For head coach Mike DeWitt '87, the win was his 284th at Ohio Wesleyan, giving him more wins at OWU than any other men's basketball coach.

In the second round, OWU defeated Lynchburg 97-94. Sophomore guards Nate Axelrod and Seth Clark, and junior post Ben Simpson scored 22 points apiece, and senior wing Claude Gray added 20 points, giving the Bishops their first ever quartet of 20-point scorers in a game.

The Bishops advanced to the sectional semifinals (final 16 teams) for the first time since 2008, but lost 97-84 to eventual national runner-up Benedictine. OWU finished the season with a 25-5 record, the second-highest season win total in school history.

Axelrod was named NCAC Player of the Year, the Bishops' fourth NCAC Player of the Year selection in the last five seasons. Clark and Simpson also were first-team all-conference selections, and Gray was a second-team All-NCAC pick.

Axelrod was named Great Lakes Region Player of the Year by D3hoops.com and received second-team All-American laurels from D3hoops.com and third-team All-America honors from National Association of Basketball Coaches. He ranked fifth in the NCAC in scoring with an average of 17.2 points per game and led the league in assists with an average of 5.6 per game. He also led the league in assist/turnover ratio (3.8).

The women's track & field team won its 10th consecutive NCAC championship, outscoring Oberlin, 171-131½ in the conference championship meet. Individual honors included:

Senior Abbey Warth was named Most Outstanding Middle Distance/Distance Performer after winning the 800-meter and mile runs in respective times of 2:16.86 and 5:04.61.

Junior Sarah Fowler won an NCAC title and set school and meet records, winning the 5000-meter run in 17:17.65 to break her

TRACK & FIELD COACH SETS NCAC CAREER RECORD

By Zane Kieffer '16

The Ohio Wesleyan men's and women's track & field teams have given head coach Kris Boey a remarkable career milestone. When the Battling Bishops swept the men's and women's indoor titles at the North Coast Athletic Conference championship meet in March, the two championships increased Boey's career total to 25 (both men and women's indoor and outdoor), making him the all-time leader among NCAC track & field coaches.

Now in his 14th season at Ohio Wesleyan, Boey has helped produce 161 NCAA qualifiers, 37 All-Americans, 37 NCAC Athlete of the Year selections, and 995 All-NCAC honorees. His student-athletes have broken 157 school records. Boey's peers have voted him NCAC Coach of the Year 25 times. He also has received Regional Coach of the Year honors 10 times since 2007.

"This is an accomplishment that I take great pride as a milestone in my career, but it really means that we have had exceptional student-athletes who dedicated themselves to being part of something bigger than themselves and worked hard to win these team championships," Boey says.

Boey says the teams' spirit and culture set them above the competition. "I believe that we have created an outstanding team culture, but around the team concept. That can be a difficult thing to accomplish in an individual-team sport."

With so many celebrated athletes in his 14-year tenure, Boey says, "We look to recruit students with the best combination of character, scholarship, and athletic ability. It's important to consider the person first. Just because a person is talented doesn't mean that they will be a good fit in our program. We will take chances on developing athletes if they really want to be a part of the team and University. Often times these student-athletes will grow to become difference makers in our program and on our campus."

Boey says his most important mentor has been longtime OWU coach (1960-97) Marv Frye. "Marv has reinforced the value in doing things the right way, not just what will best serve us in the short term. He's become like family to me and I've learned more about the sport from him than anyone else."

He adds, "I've also learned a great deal from my coaching own school record of 17:46.27 and the NCAC record of 17:19.23.

Freshman Alyssa Acevedo won an NCAC title and set a school record, winning the long jump with a leap of 18-2¾ to break the school record of 18-1 set by Emily Brown the previous week.

Meanwhile, the men's track & field team outscored Wabash, 223-183½, giving the Battling Bishops their first NCAC indoor title since 2010. Individual honors included:

Seniors Ahmed Abdel Halim and Adam Turner were named Most Outstanding Performers. Abdel Halim was named Most Outstanding Field Events Performer after winning the triple jump (46-4½), finishing second in the long jump, and placing fifth in the high jump. Turner was named Most Outstanding Sprints/Hurdles Performer after winning the 200- and 400-meter dashes in respective times of 22.83 and 50.12.

Five Bishops qualified for the NCAA Division III championship meet, with Abdel Halim and Fowler winning All-America honors. Abdel Halim finished sixth in the triple jump with a leap of 47-4½. Fowler finished eighth in the 5000-meter run in 17:13.13 to win her first All-America citation in track & field and continue her outstanding 2015-16 year. Fowler won All-America honors in cross country in November, finishing 24th to become Ohio Wesleyan's third All-American in women's cross country. Her time also broke the school record of 17:17.65 she set earlier in the season. ■

OWU sophomore and Battling Bishops point guard Nate Axelrod was named to the All-Great Lakes District team by the National Association of Basketball Coaches.

colleagues in the department, as well as my coaching staff. They should get as much credit as the head coach."

Though his teams have 25 titles, Boey is a coach who doesn't follow the "winning is everything" philosophy.

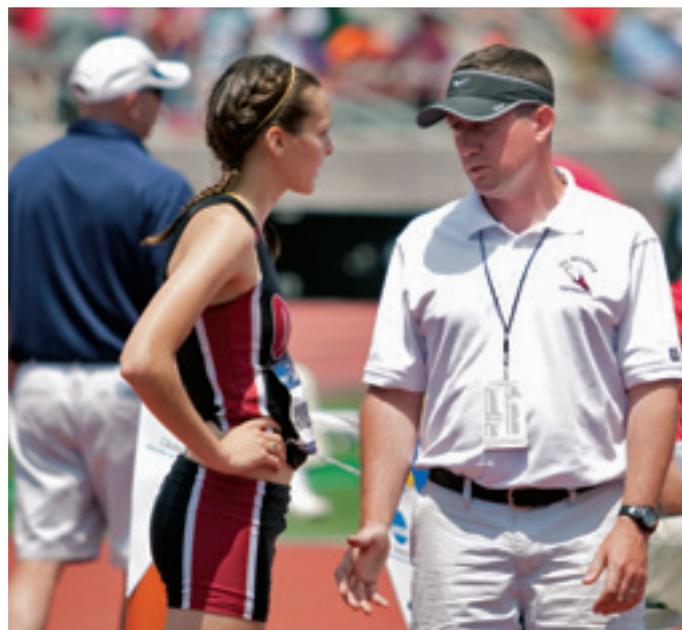

Boey says his work ethic comes from his parents. "I learned from them that things may not always come easy, but they're still worth it."

He's also grateful to his wife, Leslie, and children, Abbie, Alex, and Avery, for their "support and understanding in allowing me to do what I need to do on behalf of our student-athletes. "Winning a team championship is always a goal, and an accomplishment that we all can enjoy together, but it is not the ultimate goal," he says.

"While our accomplishments have been fun and rewarding, it doesn't mean we've failed if we don't win. I cherish my first four years at OWU when we were chasing the championship title just as much as I've enjoyed the last 10 years. As long as our students are growing and preparing for the next chapter in their lives, we have been successful."

With the outdoor track & field season underway, the Bishops look to continue their success under their unquestioned leader, Coach Kris Boey. ■

REIMAGINING HIS ROOTS, EAST AND WEST

Salman Toor '06 still remembers when his teenage passion for art grew even stronger, during his first art history class at Ohio Wesleyan with Carol Neuman de Vegvar, Frank L. & Eva L. Packard Professor of Fine Arts.

"I knew a terribly interesting new door was opening for me," Toor says of the experience. "Western Art History began to ignite my imagination, and I fancied myself an apprentice to the masters of European painting such as Giovanni Bellini and Titian."

Toor graduated with a Bachelor of Fine Arts from OWU and went on to receive his MFA in painting from New York's Pratt Institute in 2009. Born in Lahore, Pakistan, in 1983, he now lives in Brooklyn, creating art that explores the ambiguities of living in the East and West.

He views himself as a wanderer, travelling between boundaries. Toor is inspired by the dissonance, understanding, and confusion of leaving his community of origin.

From October to December 2015, Toor displayed his second solo show at the Aicon Gallery in New York City. This exhibition, entitled "Resident Alien," mostly comprises large-scale paintings.

Hyperallergic, a forum for radical perspectives on contemporary art and culture, noted the exhibit's paintings

"envision the possibility of a new world that comingles the East and the West and projects a third space of harmony."

Toor is working on a new body of work for an exhibition in Karachi, Pakistan. He is also illustrating a graphic novel entitled The Electrician with his friend, Alexandra Atiya, a writer. The novel, immersed in the supernatural, follows the inner lives of a middle-class family in Lahore over the course of a week, displaying the social conflict in contemporary Pakistani life.

"In the real world, to be an artist doesn't just mean one can stay in one's garage, hidden away from the world, painting," says Toor. He believes that artists, despite their usual daydreaming nature, must be able to plan their futures and engage with the world.

Toor likes not knowing exactly what he is going to do next in his work, so he makes decisions quickly during composition. In his lively, colorful paintings that are both intimate and intensely relatable, Toor blends the meditative element of painting with the element of risk.

"With every painting I feel like I finally have the hang of it, but I begin anew every single time," Toor says. ■

DISCOVERING DON FAUSTO

Not all Galápagos tortoises are the same. At least that's what zoologist Gregory Watkins-Colwell '91 recently discovered. Watkins-Colwell and a team of scientists identified a new species of Galápagos tortoise that previously went under the radar because scientists assumed that all of the Galápagos tortoises shared the same genetic makeup.

Watkins-Colwell says that it is always important not to make assumptions, which is a rule he learned at Ohio Wesleyan.

Watkins-Colwell is the collections manager at the Yale Peabody Museum of Natural History, one of the world's oldest and largest university natural history museums. He says when colleagues in the lab across the hall studied the Galápagos tortoises using molecular techniques, they quickly realized that the molecular makeup of the reptiles actually differs significantly. Digging deeper, they found that the differences lie mostly in the DNA sequences, and slightly in the shell morphology.

Watkins-Colwell, who majored in pre-professional zoology, was selected to examine the skull, describe its morphology, and photograph it. He says that the skull is now the "holotype" of the species, which means it is the specimen used as the basis for the description and name of the new species.

According to scientists, the new species of Galápagos tortoise lives on the Santa Cruz island in a lowland known as Cerro Fatal or "Deadly Hill." This new species is uniquely named "Don Fausto" after a 75-year-old park ranger who dedicated his life to helping the endangered tortoises. Watkins-Colwell also helped identify a new species of leopard frog in 2014.

When not making impactful scientific discoveries, he manages the research specimen collection of amphibians, reptiles, and fishes. It's a career path that started at the Ohio Wesleyan University Museum of Zoology, he says. "[That] was the first time I worked in an academic museum collection, and now I do it every day!"

As part of his job, Watkins-Colwell travels the world to do field work. "A couple years ago I went to Brunei to participate in a rapid assessment of the biodiversity of a mountain," he says. He participates in several professional organizations, including the Society for the Study of Amphibians, previously known as the Ohio Herpetological Society.

Watkins-Colwell also serves as an adjunct faculty member at OWU. This usually involves hosting OWU interns and externs at the Yale museum where he works.

Watkins-Colwell and his wife, Kellie, have two children who he says keep them busy, but he still finds time to keep captive geckos and read science fiction. ■

Come Home for Alumni Weekend '16!

Join us on campus May 13-15 for Alumni Weekend. Each year we welcome back more than 800 alumni for a weekend of reminiscing and fun! While alumni graduating in years ending in "1" and "6" will celebrate reunions this year, we encourage all OWU alumni to attend. Visit owu.edu/alumniweekend2016 to register, and to see a full schedule and who is attending!

Weekend highlights include:

- Celebrating Ohio Wesleyan, an event that recognizes alumni with professional accomplishments, and/or outstanding service to humankind. Recipients include the following individuals:
Alumni Awards: Evan Corns '59, Robert Gillespie '66, Michael Long '66
Distinguished Achievement Citations: Carol Jane Galante '76, Randall Griffin '66, Gregory Moore '76, James Oberg '66
Honorary Alumni Status: Jed Burt, Emeritus Professor of Zoology
Young Alumni Award: Driss Sekkat '06 and Meghan Feran Sexton '06
- 50th Reunion Welcome Luncheon for the Class of 1966
- Blues & BBQ Kick-off Dinner and Reunion dinners

Lecturer in Theatre & Dance

Jill Becker taught Delicious Movement, a class combining the anatomical principles of Thomas Myers with dance improvisation. She also performed a solo dance contrasting private and public parts of oneself at the Body Mind Centering Association Conference at Reed College in Portland, OR, in June 2015.

Visiting Assistant Professor of Geography Nick Crane is part of a research team that received support from the Institute for Human Geography for a project called "Breaking Consent, Making Space for Racial and Economic Justice."

Professor of Botany & Microbiology Jerry Goldstein published three research articles in 2015 co-authored by current and former OWU students: "Sodium Fluoride Enhances T2 Bacteriophage Yield," co-authored by Jazmine Quinn '15, was published in Research & Reviews: A Journal of Biotechnology; "Garlic and Onion Extracts Enhance the Yield of T2 Bacteriophage in E. Coli," co-authored with Owen Kelling '16, Gregory Serpa '15, Karli Sturgill '15, and Madeline Vroom '16, also published in Research & Reviews; and "Comparison of the Keratinase Gene Sequences of Fast and Slow Feather Degrading Strains of Bacillus licheniformis," co-authored by OWU graduates Patricia Celestino Soper '05, Allison Morrell Bailey '05, and Sara Fitzgerald-Butt '00, published in Research & Reviews: A Journal of Microbiology and Virology.

Professor of Physics & Astronomy Robert Haring-Kaye

published "Coexisting Single-Particle and Collective Excitations in 70As" in Physical Review C, the premier domestic journal for nuclear physics research. The article resolves several uncertainties surrounding the underlying structure of a particular isotope of arsenic that have remained a mystery since this nucleus was first studied in the 1970s. Musser Performs at Seoul Celebration to Honor Horace Allen

Joseph Musser, Helen Whitelaw Jackson University Professor and Benjamin F. & Margaret Cessna Professor Emeritus of English, and an organist, performed his own composition, "Namdaemoon Celebration," in Seoul, South Korea, in June 2015, to commemorate the 130th anniversary of the Namdaemoon Presbyterian Church.

The church traces its founding to a small service held by medical missionary Dr. Horace Allen, Class of 1881, and his wife Frances Ann Messenger of Huron, OH, in 1885 in their home in Korea. Allen's contributions advanced Western medicine in the country and helped establish the first hospital and medical school in the Chosŏn region.

Rebuilt in 1904 with a major contribution from Louis H. Severance of Cleveland, the hospital became known as Severance Hospital and the medical school as the Severance Medical School. Today the hospital is considered one of the top medical facilities in Asia, and Allen went on to serve the first American ambassador to Korea.

To mark the anniversary, Musser incorporated into his composition American and Korean folk tunes to symbolize both cultures' confluence in Allen's life and work, as well as the continuing relationship between the Namdaemoon Presbyterian Church and the First Presbyterian Church of Delaware.

Louise Musser, emeritus professor of education and associate dean of academic affairs, read a congratulatory letter from President Rock Jones written on behalf of Ohio Wesleyan.

authored by Robert Elder '15, a mathematics and physics double-major at OWU and current graduate student studying nuclear physics at Michigan State University.

In November, the Quince Contemporary Music Ensemble premiered Assistant Professor of Music Jennifer Jolley's Pussy Riot-inspired song cycle "Prisoner of Conscience" at Constellation Chicago.

Assistant Professor of Modern Foreign Languages Glenda Y. Nieto-Cuebas received the OWU Presidential Award for Racial and Cultural Diversity. This year she taught a Theory-to-Practice course in Spain where students researched how Spanish classical theater plays are adapted and produced for contemporary audiences. She also co-authored an annotated edition of the Spanish early modern play Amazonas en las Indias, and co-translated the Spanish comic play Interlude of the Witches.

Assistant Professor of Modern Foreign Languages Eva Paris-Huesca had several pieces published in 2015, including three book chapters: "Intersección de miradas femeninas y voces andaluzas en el cine de Pilar Távora" in Mujeres directoras en el cine español de los orígenes de la construcción de la propia Mirada; "(Re)apropiación de la novela detectivesca: la violencia de(l) género en Las niñas perdidas de Cristina Fallarás" in Tras la pista. Novela criminal escrita por mujeres; and "En busca de un pasado perdido: Sé quién eres y los nuevos discursos de la memoria" in El género eterno: Estudios sobre novela y cine negro. She also published the peer-reviewed journal article "Pilar Miró y el revival del noir en los noventa: Beltenebros y la femme fatale en proceso de de(con)strucción" in Lectora. Revista de mujeres y textualidad 21.

Emeritus professor of zoology, Wendell Patton authored "On the Natural History and Functional Morphology of the Clam Shrimp Lynceus Brachyurus," published in Journal of Crustacean Biology. Patton details the results of a long-term study on the biology and life cycle of a small crustacean that lives in temporary woodland pools south of Delaware.

Assistant Professor of Education Campbell Scribner authored the book, The Fight for Local Control: Schools, Suburbs, and American Democracy, forthcoming in May by Cornell University Press. Scribner explains how 1970s suburban conservatives used the legacy of the one-room schoolhouse to change educational law, and shielded themselves from racial desegregation and tax equalization. He also explores why conservatives have begun to abandon local control as a political cause.

Professor of Physics and Astronomy Brad Trees '86 will be a named contributor in the first digital edition of the world's leading college physics textbook, originally authored by Halliday and Resnick. The new work will be marketed as Fundamentals of Physics (digital edition), by Jearl Walker with Interactive Simulations by Brad Trees. Publication is forthcoming in January 2018.

Professor of Botany & Microbiology Chris Wolverton was elected to a three-year term on the governing board of the American Society for Gravitational and Space Research at its annual meeting in November 2015. He continues to work toward a 2017 launch of his experiment on the International Space Station, and the project's budget has been increased to support development for flight.

CLASSnotes

1940s

William Farragher '49, creator of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube trademark, gave a presentation called "Memories of a Lifetime" for the William Holmes McGuffey Historical Society of Youngstown, OH, in October 2015.

1950s

Richard Jackson '53 published The Rules, a book of tips for those beginning their careers.

Ted Pollard '55, of Middletown, OH, retired from the news business (Cox Newspapers Ohio and The Kansas City Star), and was honored to have his two-act play, "Grant's Wish," stage-read by actors in a performance at Cincinnati's Aronoff Center under the auspices of the Cincinnati Playwrights Initiative and the Cincinnati Arts Association. A number of OWU grads attended the event. It was Ted's first try at playwriting, and he hopes the work will be produced at the high school or college level.

John "Larry" Hill '57, a semi-retired surgeon and professor emeritus of surgery at the University of Maryland and Johns Hopkins University, was named Professional of the Year by the International Association of Who's Who for exemplary achievements in the fields of health care and education.

1960s

Gloria Fox Wendel '60 was featured by the Times Bulletin in Van Wert, OH, for her 55-year tenure as the organist at First United Methodist Church.

Sandra Walker Kelly '61 received the Indiana Achievement Award for Distinction in Community Leadership.

Paul Schimmel '62 was elected to the National Academy of Inventors, a distinction recognizing academic inventors who demonstrate a prolific spirit of innovation in creating or facilitating outstanding inventions that have made a tangible impact on quality of life, economic development, and the welfare of society. Paul is a professor in the Department of Cell and Molecular Biology at The Scripps Research Institute.

Flora Cunningham '64, director of the Oneonta's City of the Hills chapter of Sweet Adelines International women's barbershop singing group, was selected as the group's 2015 "Sweet Adeline of the Year." She was awarded a certificate and pin in September at the 2015 Vocal Fest music education weekend in Albany, NY.

Edward Miller Jr. '64 was elected to the board of directors for EnGeneIC Ltd., a clinical stage biopharmaceutical company.

Herbert Cady Jr. '65 retired in December 2015 from a 41-year career as a pediatrician. He now plans to spend more time learning how to write fiction.

Carl Good '66 presented on the Rotary International's drive for the total eradication of polio at the Wellesley Community Center in Wellesley, MA, in October 2015. Carl has participated in polio eradication missions in Bangladesh, Kenya, and Nigeria, and he is the Polio Project chairman for his Rotary district.

MORE THAN 90 YEARS OF ART HONORED

Carol Kane Simerly '47 was the featured artist at the Payson Art League ARToberFEST Fine Art & Fine Craft Show & Sale in October of 2015 in Payson, AZ. At the age of 91, Carol has been an oil and sculpture artist for 35 years, often showing her work in galleries near her home in Payson. At ARToberFEST, Carol exhibited her Southwestern art collection, including Tonto Apache portraits, Native American bronzes, and wall sculptures. Carol is pictured here with her full-sized paper mâché saguaro cactus.

"It was a wonderful experience at 91 years to be so honored," Carol says of her ARToberFEST feature. "I would like my classmates to know there can be life after 90."

In addition to receiving her bachelor of fine arts degree from OWU with honors, Carol studied at The Art Students League of New York. In 2006, she completed a children's book started by her late aunt titled "The Insect Wonderland." Carol assumes the persona of "Lady Dragonfly" during book signings, appealing to children who have come to love the insects featured in the book. The book is in its third printing and will soon be sold at the Smithsonian Museum of Natural History in Washington, D.C.

OWU ALUMNI CELEBRATE 30 YEARS IN BUSINESS TOGETHER

Ken Schlinger '78 (left) and Scott Bedson '81 never met during their time at OWU—but after connecting post-graduation, they built a career together that would last a lifetime. After each receiving their physical therapy degrees, the duo opened ProFitness Physical Therapy in 1986 and are now celebrating their 30th anniversary, with two locations in New York City and Brooklyn.

The business partners say compromise and willingness to listen openly to each other has been central to their successful practice over the decades. "Respect for each other and each other's beliefs has facilitated our long friendship, and that too plays a role in our successful business," Ken says.

Their milestone anniversary gives them a chance to pause and celebrate how far they have come together. "Helping people is at the root of what we do day to day," Scott says. "However, it is also rewarding to create something bigger than the two of us—the ProFitness Physical Therapy brand. This brand now represents quality healthcare in a world where quality keeps getting squandered for the bottom line. Keeping this focus for almost one-third of a century means a lot to both of us."

own brokerage, Freeland Realty Group. Her "boutique" brokerage specializes in executive and luxury real estate. Jill has been a realtor for over 15 years in the affluent suburbs surrounding Columbus. She works with her CPA husband, David, and one of her three sons, Stephen.

Tom Jolly '77 was named associate managing editor for newsroom print operations for The New York Times. In announcing Jolly's appointment, Dean Baquet, the executive editor of The Times, said: "As night editor for four years, he was instrumental in expanding the news desk's role beyond print. As sports editor, he began a run of creative sports coverage that continues unabated, including our landmark coverage of concussions in sports. I'm excited that Tom will now be a key player in the next step of our evolution."

Thomas Rosenberg '77, a partner in Roetzel's Columbus,

OH, office, has been named a 2016 Ohio Super Lawyer in the field of Construction Litigation by Ohio Super Lawyers magazine.

Christina Smith '77 joined the structural engineering firm Nishkian Monks as administrative assistant in Bozeman, MT. Smith previously spent over 30 years working for Prugh & Lenon Architects PC as a business manager.

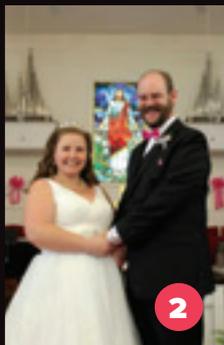

Gail Wendt Hutton '79 was appointed head of lower school at Garrison Forest School in Owings Mills, MD. Garrison Forest School is an independent K-12 all-girls day and boarding school with a coed preschool, located outside Baltimore, MD.

1980s

Morton Bouchard III '80 received the honorary doctor of science degree from the State University of New York Maritime College in January.

UPCOMING 3RD ANNUAL MAINE ALZFEST & OWU REUNION

Sigma Chi David Hazard '80 and Phi Psi Greg Altnauer '81 came together two years ago to organize a reunion of OWU classmates from the late '70s and early '80s in the Portland, ME, area. The alumni invited classmates to the Cape Elizabeth area in late September for what became known as the First Annual Maine Alzfest & OWU Reunion. The event will be back this year for the third time, hosted September 9-11, 2016.

"The gathering is a wonderful opportunity to celebrate our friendships at OWU and relive and recount those glory days, all while creating some new and lasting memories," David says. The three-day weekend includes a Friday golf tournament, dinner and cocktails on the coastline of Maine, and an early wake-up call so all involved can participate in the annual Maine Lighthouse Ride, an annual 25- to 100-plus-mile cycling event up and down the southern coast of Maine). A party at Greg's home caps off the weekend, followed by a cycling awards dinner and a night out on the town.

The group has increased with each passing year, and David and Greg hope to welcome upwards of 50 people in the next few years. Interested alumni are invited to join in the fun this year, whether for all or part of the weekend. Simply email David (dlhazard@gmail.com) or Greg (galtz@yahoo.com) to get involved.

Leonard "Len" N. Russell, of Coldwater, MI, October 17, at the age of 93. During his 31-year tenure with OWU, Len was a professor in the Department of Physics and Astronomy. Since 1957 he directed the Summer Institutes of the National Science Foundation. He served many years as faculty marshal and as secretary of the faculty. A devoted teacher and scholar, Len received the Adam Poe Medal at his retirement in 1985 as professor emeritus. Len was a long-time active member of William Street United Methodist Church, serving in numerous capacities, including as a member of Bill's Bells, a hand-bell choir. At a 2015 lecture at OWU, William Hsiao '59, a preeminent economist at Harvard University, remembered how Dr. Russell mentored and advised him when he was a student. Others recall how Len lived a life based on the principles of humility, honesty, integrity, and compassion. He and his wife Lavon, who passed in 2009, are survived by two daughters, Linda Russell Kuivinen and Janet R. Messaros; three grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. Please see a longer version of this obituary at <http://blogs.owu.edu/magazine>.

The MUSIC of Our OWU TIMES

By Paula M. Kalamaras '76

When I arrived at Ohio Wesleyan, I absorbed as much literature, history, science, languages, mythology, philosophy, and the arts as possible. Even music. In a recent Huffington Post article, I recollected how Bruce Springsteen's "Born to Run" album, especially "Jungleland," changed my relationship with my distant grandmother. I also recalled how my classical music- fixated mother established a formula that required me to listen to two classical music selections for every rock song I heard—down to the minute. Most of the time, it was just easier not to listen to music, rather than do all the math.

By the time I got to OWU, I was like a palimpsest, ready to write a new chapter over the old ones and punctuated by the music of my own era.

Music has been part of the human experience since the dawn of time. Archaeologists have discovered primitive bone and ivory flutes from 43,000-year-old Neanderthal graves and even musical notations on a 4,000-year-old Sumerian clay tablet. Apollo and the Muses—from whom the word derives—glorified music during the classical world. Music is found in every country. It binds us to each other and gives us context no matter what our differences.

While I came late to the party, I lost no time catching up. Music became one of my primary ways of communicating. I was not particularly adept at expressing myself verbally (I'm still not), and song lyrics helped me express my feelings. Gordon Lightfoot's old standby "If You Could Read My Mind" actually got me through a nasty breakup. It may have been the coward's way out, but I didn't have the option of texting a breakup or even doing it via voicemail. In fact, Cheap Trick's "I Want You to Want Me" still resonates as one of my favorite ways to express myself.

On a less cringe-worthy note, whenever I hear Pink Floyd's "Money" track from "The Dark Side of the Moon", I vividly recall how during my first year, my roommate and I were hanging out in our room in Stuyvesant with our boyfriends listening to the album. We were all just talking and eating brownies when we discovered we'd all been involved in productions of "Oklahoma!" in high school. Just hearing the sound of the cash register in "Money" summons an image of the four of us sitting on my top bunk, legs dangling, and belting out "O-k-l-a-h-o-m-a" as neighbors stood in our doorway and looked at us as if we were crazy.

Once during finals, one of the fraternity houses put speakers in their windows and blasted "Layla" from Derrick and the Dominoes loud enough to be heard all the way to Gray Chapel. I recall dropping books, standing close to my boyfriend, and slowly swaying to Nicky Hopkins' piano solo. It was a magical moment that lives in me always.

I even grew to appreciate all those hours of classical music and opera. In one of my humanities classes, we studied Wagner's Ring der Nebelungen. One evening at our professor's house, we discussed how the leitmotifs (recurring themes in the piece) gave the characters more depth and connected them within the entire cycle. I wasn't shy about contributing my own analysis of the musical connections throughout the cycle.

As Shakespeare wrote, "If music be the food of love, play on/ Give me excess of it." Other days and nights provide that excess in my memories. Whether it was arguing the nuances of guitar solos, or if music from previous decades was better than what we were hearing, music became the foundation of so many vibrant experiences. Even now, when I hear certain songs by Bruce Springsteen, David Bowie, Jethro Tull, The Moody Blues, The Clash, or The Eagles, I want to go through the looking glass and return to those halcyon days at OWU where I was young, and music surrounded and defined me. ■

"Even now, when I hear certain songs... I want to go through the looking glass and return to those halcyon days at OWU."

Did a particular song or album help define your years at Ohio Wesleyan? Please tell us your stories and we'll publish them in the Fall OWU Magazine. Email us at owu.edu/news-media/owu-magazine/your-thoughts.

Thank you, Professor!

They helped you understand, grow, and channel your natural curiosity and youthful idealism into the qualities that have made you you.

You may not have thanked them then—but you can show your gratitude now.

Please offer a note of thanks to the Ohio Wesleyan professor(s) who made a difference.

Bo Rabby —
~~Thanks for challenging me and for~~ ~~opening up my mind. You helped me~~
~~and opened me up to~~
Thanks for being such a hard ass.
You demanded more from me than I thought I could muster. You made me more resilient and more unquarrelled. And I owe much of my growth as an actor to you.

Dear Dr. McClure,

Sarah's experience at OWU stands out as a model of how a university department chair should interact with and guide a student. We want you to know just how much we appreciate everything you did for Sarah, both during college and after graduation. We are making this gift as a token of our appreciation!

All the best,

Sue and Matt Chizmar

Amy McClure, Ph.D., chair of the OWU Department of Education

Give something back to those who gave you so much by using the envelope in this magazine to make a gift in honor of your favorite Ohio Wesleyan professor. You may designate your gift to a specific department or program. And you can enclose a note of thanks that we'll share with your professor, when possible, and his/her department.

It's never too late to show your gratitude for those who changed your life or your child's life.
